Shah Retains His Grip on Troubled Iran

Despite Growing Opposition, Only the Army Can Oust Him

By William Claiborne

TEHRAN, Sept. 15 (WP) — Rising above smog-shrouded downtown Tehran, with its view of 19,000-foot Mount Damavand, the new headquarters of the Rastakhiz Party is a monument to the one-party dream of Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlavi, imperial ruler of

But beset by construction delays and squabbling within the Rastakhiz Party, the skyscraper is still empty three years after the founding of the party that the Shah envi-sioned as a melting pot for differing views within Iran's diverse society.

About three miles southeast of the Rasta-suggest that the shah is on the verge of being run from his throne, it would be understating it to deny that a new situation exists in Iran, and that the future of the monarchy is less certain than it once was.

The stah's "White Revolution"— the frenetic oil-fed development boom that affronted many leaders of Iran's 33 million Shiite Moslems and triggered the unrest here—is foundering. The boom has leveled out oil production has clipped the labor out, oil production has slipped, the labor force has proved inadequate and rampant inflation has worsened the quality of life for

Moreover, Iran has become so rife with land speculation, political corruption and conspicuous consumption by the favored class that thousands of previously apolitical and poor Iranians have become disillusoned and were easily stirred into opposition by the Moslem Mullahs, or prayer leaders.

The Rastakhiz, fran's only legal political party, is in such disarray that the shah him-self at a recent press conference voiced disappointment over its development.

Even though the shah has made elear that he is not thinking of returning to a multipar-ty system, some politicians have announced their intention to desert or ignore the Rasta-kinz and form their own splinter parties.

Although just a year ago it would have been unthinkable to call publicly for an end to the government, now deputies in Parlia-ment are standing up and boldly accusing Prime Minister Jaafar Sharif-Emani of misfeasance and of lying about how many antishah demnstrators were killed last Friday. Under pressure from the increasingly vocal dissidents, the shah last month inangurated his "Iranian spring," easing restric-tions on freedom of the press and assembly. The result was even more challenges to the monarchy and the disastrous clash last Friday, which immediately resulted in martial law for the entire country.

While it is 100 early to tell whether marwhile it is too early to tell whether mar-tial law will spawn new violence and new challenges to the throne, one thing is cer-tain: the oppositon by itself cannot take over the government and the only force ca-pable of removing the shah is his highly trained and superbly equipped army.

Signs of Confusion

There are signs of dissensing and confusion within the opposition — though they are exaggerated by the government. But there is no visible dismity in the pampered officer corps of the Iran Army, the largest in the Gulf region with more than 300,000 men plus another 81,000 in the air force.

The army is everywhere in Iran, only minutes away from any trouble. By all appear-(Continued on Page 2, Col. 5)

Talks Reported to Focus On 3-Way West Bank Plan

Conclusion of Summit Seen Likely on Monday

WASHINGTON, Sept. 15 (1HT)

- The Camp David summit meetings, which now are expected to continue into next week, were reported today to be focusing on n plan for a three-way partnership over the West Bank of the Jordan.

The White House press spokes-man, Jody Powell, publicly repre-senting President Carter and the leaders of Egypt and Israel, emphasized again today the need for "more flexibility and more prog-ress" before the summit talks can produce agreement on even a framework for continued negotia-

He denied Egyptian newspaper reports that the conference had reached a stalemate bordering on collapse but declined to describe the status of the discussions.

He said that there was no chance of the summit ending by tomorrow.

Other sources said that the conclusion of the conference could come Monday.

It was understood that the principals — Mr. Carter, Egyptian President Anwar Sadat and Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin - have been focusing on a concept involving a three-way partnership over the West Bank.

Under this plan, it was said, Jordan would be responsible for edncation, passports and police duties; the Palestinian Arabs would run domestic affairs, as spelled out in Mr. Begin's plan for "self-rule" that would offer the Palestinians limited autonomy, and Israel would maintain external security for a period of limited duration.

Jordan was said to be the key to this plan and it was not clear whether King, Hussein would accept the proposal.

Meanwhile, House Speaker Thomas (Tip) O'Neill disclosed that the White House had inquired yesterday about the possibility of holding a joint session of Congress on Monday to hear the results of the summit, but that the idea had been promptly called off. Mr. Carter and Secretary of State

Cyrus Vance met for an hour this morning with Israeli Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan. This meeting followed Mr. Carter's regular foreign policy breakfast with Vice President Mondale, who will stay at Camp David for the weekend, Mr. Vance, Defense Secretary Har-old Brown, national security adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski and Hamilton Jordan, the chief presidential aide.

Razor Sharp Edges

The East Germans have added a last sadistic refinement to the wire fence. The upper edges of the wire are razor sharp. Any escapee trying for a handhold would lose his fingers and, when he had activated the shotgun, his life.

Despite these hazards seven East German border gnards and 11 East German civilians have managed to get through the fence in the last nine months by various means. They defied not only the shotguns and the razor-sharp edges of the fence but also ravenous German shepherd dogs left to run loose in certain sensitive areas.

According to Western intelli-gence, the border guards are drawn from the most politically reliable elements in East Germany. Yet, seven have managed to get across and no ooe this side of the fence knows how many have tried and failed.

Mr. Alunni, a former Carabinieri (special police) officer, was arrested Wednesday night after police traced him through stolen documents to an apartment complex

Police found Mr. Alunni, known as "the man of many faces," while investigating a pickpocketing com-plaint of June, 1977, by Bologna ar-chitect Massimo Turrichia. Mr. Alunni was living under Mr. Turri-chia's name and was carrying altered documents based on the architect's identity.

Antiterrorist police were also questioning a woman who was ar-rested last night, when she tried to visit Mr. Alunni. The woman, Maria Zoni, had been one of two regular female visitors to Mr. Alumni's apartment, police said.

The tone of his speech suggested that Gen. Eanes, having been given a slap on the hand, was now again welcome as a partner in the political process. There is no indication that the test case of the Nobre da Costa Cabinet, which continues in a caretaker role, has resolved the latent conflict between the president and the parties that is built into the constitution. In Lisbon, politicians speak of a prolonged crisis, and there is a growing consensus that the only outcome may be early parliamentary elections, due on pres-ent schedule in 1980.

Article 198 of Portugal's consti-tution stipulates that the president cannot dissolve the National Assembly and call new elections until a government's program has been rejected three times or three gov-ernments have fallen through censure or confidence motions.

It follows that many options re-main to be exhausted before elections must be called. A period of great uncertainty and instability looms, at a time when Portugal badly needs to tackle severe economic difficulties

The current impasse has oo obvious solution. No dominant party or personality, committed to democracy, is politically ascendant. The Socialists and Center Democrats have ruled out a repeat of their earlier coalition, while Mr. sa Carneiro has offered little bope of collaborating with other parties unless Gen. Eanes is given a leading role to

Trudeau to Call Election For Parliament in Spring

By Andrew H. Malcolm

TORONTO, Sept. 15 (NYT) -Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau revealed yesterday that he planned to call parliamentary elections next spring. His statement, at an Ottawa news conference, ended months of suspense.

But it also set up additional suspense. By law, Mr. Trudeau must call elections before his fiveyear parliamentary mandate ex-pires next July 30, but no Canadian government has ever emerged from a fifth-year election with a majori-

Elections were expected this summer or in the autumn. Winter elections are usually shunned by politicians in this bitterly cold, northern climate.

The 58-year-old Trudeau, a political maverick throughout his career, declined to pinpoint the ex-act election date he has in mind for next spring. The law does not re-quire him to amounce it until 59 days beforehand.

Unfavorable Corner

Once again he is going against political tradition, which holds here that leaving elections until the end of a term paints incumbents into an unfavorable tactical corner. Mr. Trudeau is betting that the standing of his Liberal Party will improve, or at least not worsen, between now and next spring, when his room to maneuver in timing the election will be at a minimum.

Political sources say Mr. Trudean's private polls this year indicated that he would have had a difficult time now retaining the parliamentary majority be has beld

Marginal Growth

His leadership has come under withering criticism in recent months. In 1975, after successfully campaigning on a platform oppos-ing wage and price controls, he im-posed both. That program is only now beginning to be phased out.

Inflacion continues to rise at an Inflation continues to rise at an annual rate of 9.4 percent, while Canada's gross national product grows only marginally — last year growth was 2.8 percent. Signs this year indicate a possible 4.4 percent

The frequent, sometimes tortu-ous analyses of Mao's thought carried nowadays in the official press indicate that debate of sorts is still going on between Mao admirers who emphasize different parts of his voluminous writings. ances it is under the firm control of its officers, who are unflinchingly loyal to the shah. Their morale presumably is boosted by frequent pay raises and enormous acquisitions of the most sophisticated weaponry.

At a recent reception at the crown palace, this loyalty was vividly displayed as streams of bemedaled generals approached the shah and — their eyes brimming with pride — sharply clicked their beels, bowed low and kissed his hand reverently.

In short, as long as the shah controls the army, the shah controls Iran. Some members of the opposition are suggesting that any rebellion would come not from the officer corps, but from the disillusoned ranks of enlisted men. There is not much evidence, however, to indicate a real threat at present.

Dissidents report bere that in last

Friday's clash, a soldier turned his rifle on his commander, shot him and then killed himself. But that unconfirmed report seems to pale against the seemingly flawless disci-pline displayed by troops deployed in public places here for the last week. Also, the shah has six mooths of martial law, which could easily be extended indefi-nitely, with which to limit his critics' effectiveness. As one Western diplomat here said his week. "Is the shah in trouble? You might have been able to say that before martial law, but not now,"

The shah also has oumerous fallback positions to temporize on the most unpalatable aspects of his authority and, thereby, reduce to some extent the breadth of public support for the opposition.

He already has done this by making symbolic change in his government and by launching a much-publicized anticorruption

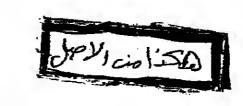

By continuing his liberalization program, the shah obviously hopes to shift the thrust of opposition from violent confrontation to

While he seems not to have found a way yet to broaden the thin borderline between loyal opposition and subversion, observers here do not dicount the possibility that the shah can create a situation of delicately harnessed disgrundement and thereby preserve his regime indefinitely.

The real threats, observers agree, proba-bly lie further down the road, when the shah's 18-year-old son, crown Prince Reza, takes control of the nation. But for the moment, the shah seems to have been not far off the mark when be said in an interview in June with U.S. News and World Report: "Nobody can overthrow me . . . I

The telephone calls were answered by more than 200 businessmen, congressmen and government officials in a House committee room. At one point, the incoming calls jammed the Capitol switchboard and spilled over into the office of House Speaker Thomas O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., who wanted to know what was going on.

Variety of Questions Callers were asked how important they considered regulatory reform; whether they believed they were better off because of federal regulation in jobs, education, advertising food and drugs, and whether they felt regulations had any effect on inflation.

The response was clear: The callers thought government regulation is burdensome, expensive, suspect and an increasing infringe-

House Ignores Veto Hint, Votes Spending Bill

WASHINGTON, Sept. 15 (WP)

The measure, which had been compiled for law enforcement pur- adopted by House-Senate conferees, now needs Senate approval. President Carter has hinted that he will veto the bill, and the White House has begun a low-key public

The appropriations bill would provide money for a oumber of flood-cootrol and water-resources projects, as well as $200 million to build the Clinch River breeder

U.S. House Backs Airline Ticket Tax

WASHINGTON, Sept. 15 - The House gave the airline industry a raise $3 billion to $4 billion in taxes big boost yesterday, approving a in the oext five year, depending on special ticket tax to finance the the volume of airline traffic. Indipurchase of a new generation of quiet aircraft

The major U.S. airlines could receive as much as $4 billion in tax revenues in the oext five years to meet tough federal regulations on noise. This should provide a spate of new orders for the big plane manufacturers — Lockheed. McDonnell Douglas and Boeing already prospering from the expan-sion plans of a healthy airline

The House voted 272 to 123 for the Airport and Aircraft Noise Reduction Act, completing action on Jordan and Charles Kirho for a the bill. A companion measure in group of Georgians trying to help the Senate is awaiting action in the fugitive financier Robert Vesco Finance Committee. The key provision of the House bill is a 2 percent tax on all airline passenger tickets and freight shipments on domestic routes.

Ticket prices would oot be increased, because passengers cur-rently pay taxes of 8 percent for airport improvements. The bill would redirect a portion of that money for use in getting a less

An airline could use tax revenues to pay for 25 percent to 40 percent of the cost of a oew plane. Money from the tax also would be available to modify existing jet engines to meet the strict noise regulations that will take effect in 1985. However, most companies are expected to purchase new jets.

New Jobs Predicted

Nearly 1,600 aircraft would be replaced or modified, Rep. Glenn Anderson, D-Calif., sponsor of the bill, said yesterday. Replacement of McDonnell Douglas DC-8s and Boeing 707s now flying would gen-erate 45,000 new jobs, either in direct production or through related economie activity, Rep. Anderson

Supporters of the bill said it would ease the problems of people living near airports, who suffer physical, emotional and financial damage from noise. The government has promulgated rules ordering noise reduction, and the people who fly should pay for the extra costs imposed on the airlines, the bill's backers argued.

But opponents denounced the bill as an unwarranted gift to a single industry, with the government acting as a tax collector for the benefit or private companies.

Automobile manufacturers, electric utility companies and industrial firms will ask for special taxes to cover the cost of combating pollution, the opponents said. Woman Ties Carter Aides To Vesco Friends in U.S.

NEW YORK, Sept. 15 (WP) - A secretary said under oath yesterday that she typed and mailed letters and placed telephone calls to Presi-dent Carter's confidants Hamilton

The secretary, Gerolyn Hobbs, 22, is a key figure in the dispute between the White House and columnist Jack Anderson over allegedly improper approaches to the Carter administration on Mr. Vesco's behalf.

Miss Hobbs told attorney Gregory Glynn of the Securities and Exchange Commission under oath yesterday that she remembered typing the letters to Mr. Jordan and Mr. Kirbo in early 1977 because "I was impressed by the names. They were important people." Mr. Kirbo, the Atlanta attorney who is President Carter's closest unofficial adviser, and Mr. Jordan, whn is a white House aide, deny receiving the letters.

Manila Envelope

In the Manhattan courtroom of U.S. Distriet Judge Charles Stew-art, Miss Hobbs testified also that she remembered receiving a manila envelope from Mr. Jordan at ber Albany, Ga., office some time after she had mailed the Feb. 9, 1977, letter to him.

Until early this year, Miss Hobbs was secretary to R.L. Herring, a Vesco associate in Georgia. She said that Spencer Lee IV, a close friend of Mr. Jordan, often visted Mr. Herring's office during the She said of the envelope from Mr.

Jordan, "I feel like his name was on the outside." She said she did not open the envelope. [The White House has dismissed yesterday's testimooy as "old and very tired charges," the Associated Press reported.]

Action Denied

Mr. Kirbo and Mr. Jordan have denied taking any action for Mr. Vesco. Mr. Anderson has said he has no evidence that anyone in the Carter administration "lifted a finger" to further the alleged effort by Mr. Herring and Mr. Lee.

Mr. Vesco is a fugitive from five federal indictments charging that he stole $224 million from Investors Overseas Services (IOS) and then tried to buy his way out of trouble with a $200,000 contribution in the Nixon re-election cam paign in 1972.

Mr. Vesco allegedly approached Mr. Herring in late 1976 with a plan to approach the new Carter administration to settle his legal difficulties. In return for their influence, Mr. Herring and his Georgia associates allegedly were to get sev-eral million dollars in stock from a Vesco corporation.

The matter came up yesterday as part of the SEC's efforts to protect IOS assets from being plundered further by Mr. Vesco.

Mr. Herring was indicted in July on federal charges of fraud and racketering. Extradition efforts to reach Mr. Vesco io Costa Rica have

Responsibility in Rhodesia

American policy in Rhodesia is in a sbambles. The effort, with Britain, to rope all the parties into a controlled transition to an elected majority-rule government has never seemed further from success. From time to time, the mixed black-white interim government in Salisbury and its guerrilla challengers nod at the Anglo-American summons to an all-parties conference. But the offer has not bad enough appeal — or force hehind it - to cause either side to make the necessary adjustments. The internal people feel that an all-parties conference would merely receive their surrender. The guerrillas feel a conference would restrict the triumph they bid to gain in the hattlefield. The "safety net" that its sponsors bave always figured a conference to be seems now all but untied at the ends.

Perhaps events will turn around: A conference may yet help salvage something for those Rhodesians (conceivably a majority) who earlier seemed ready to cast their lot with the internal administration, and it may diminish the intensity of the civil war among guerrilla groups that seems likelier hy the week. Perhaps. But if that does not come to pass, and even if it does, the United States must face up to its miscalculations. It is not just that American (and British) officials overestimated their capacity to perform a diplomatic mission akin to changing a wheel on a speeding car: That is at lest forgivable. They failed to seize the fleeting moment in which just conceivably the two sides had a roughly equal stake in experimenting with a political solution — the moment last March wben the internal administration was formed. If, to even the odds, the United States bad then sbown a bit more favor for the internal effort, instead of feeling it had to accommodate the guerrillas' foreign

What now? Without illusion, Washington and London must bold open the door to an all-parties conference, and they must lend whatever impetus their fading influence allows to any negotiations the parties may still be tempted to try among themselves. Prompt and sharp protests against atrocities - protests uninhihited by political discretion could have a humanitarian as well as a moral value. It might help to make sure the guerrillas understand that the United States, including the Congress, will inevitably be readier to deal with a moderate multiracial government sanctioned by popular vote than with a radical military government of a single race.

No one who has looked closely at the Rhodesian scene would argue that the future there was the United States' to mold. It is the local actors who, in their arrogance and ambition and fear, have made the birth of Zimbabwe tragic and wracking. Yet, the United States and Britain have made their own separate contributions to this painful process, and although they do not suffer from it as the people of Rhodesia-Zimhahwe will and are, they have a responsibility, too.

Mr. Kirbo On Call

President Carter tends to turn almost reflexively to his most trusted adviser. Atlanta attorney Charles Kirbo, when tough problems require especially careful handling and more top-level attention than the president himself can give. In putting the nearly bottomless scandal at the General Services Administration in that category, Mr. Carter is absolutely right. The question is whether Mr. Kirbo's particular brand of detachment from the Washington scene equips him to make the kind of judgments and provide the kind of advice Mr. Carter is most likely to need.

For one thing, Mr. Kirbo has no standing in the chain of command; he is not officially accountable to anybody. So it was hardly surprising that his appearance on the scene immediately sparked concerns about possible White House interference with the current investigations of alleged bribes, kickbacks and other crimes. Mr. Carter evidently did not anticipate how quickly the specter of Watergate-type obstructions of justice can still arise. Such fears may be entirely unfounded: at least so far, nobody has suggested that the Carter White House has any wrongdoings at GSA to cover up. But the principle involved is sound in any case. There is no proper place in a criminal investigation for an unofficial White House overseer - especially one who, no matter how close to the president, is still a private citizen and a lawyer with corporate clients who do husiness with GSA.

Attorney General Griffin Bell recognizes the need to avoid even the slightest appearance of impropriety. He said firmly last week that Mr. Kirbo will have "no role" in the Justice Department's investigations, no access to information derived from criminal probes and no involvement in any prosecutions. Mr. Kirbo's role, as clarified, will be to counsel and holster GSA Administrator Jay Solomon on the nonprosecutorial aspects of cleaning up the federal housekeeping agency.

That is, as Mr. Solomon put it, a "monumental job." Nearly every day there is more evidence of how habitual mismanagement and extravagance at GSA have been, and how collusive the relationships among various officials, contractors and friendly politi-cians have become. Even with strong White House support, it will take years to make all of the desirable policy and personnel changes at headquarters and in the field. To the extent that Mr. Kirbo's presence is a token of presidential concern and seriousness of purpose, it can do no harm, and perhaps even some good.

But more than a demonstration of firm presidential commitment is required in matters of this kind. Considerable political adroitness - of the sort that was absent in the president's handling of the transfer of Robert Griffin, Speaker Thomas O'Neill's protege, from the No. 2 job at GSA — is also heavily in demand. And that raises a further question about Mr. Kirbo's effectiveness as the administration's principal troubleshooter. What Mr. Kirbo's repeated rides to the rescue from his Atlanta law firm would seem to suggest is that there is something missing from the permanent inner circle at the White House. It is not a case of having nobody there whom the president trusts. And it is not as if there were no experienced old hands around. What is missing. perhaps, is a trusted intimate like Charles Kirbo, on regular duty, who is also a seasoned veteran, which Mr. Kirbo is not, of the political and bureaucratic world of Washing-

International Opinion

Cautious Confidence

The World Bank's latest annual report is pervaded hy a sense of cautious confidence . . One of its major themes is the success of the majority of developing countries in riding out the recession of 1973-75 and their unexpected resilience in the face of dramatic changes in the world economy.

In particular, the bank says that developing countries have outpaced the industrialized countries in terms of economic growth in recent years, and that many of them are likely to continue to do so in the 1980s . . .

Many developing countries are deeply disappointed with the limited progress so far in their dialogue with the industrialized world, and many Western officials now openly admit that a real dialogue at international level has yet to be joined.

It is, of course, gratifying if the developing countries are heginning to surmount the enormous additional economic problems caused for them by the energy crisis and recession. The World Bank's figures clearly show that they have fared better than many people once feared. It would be a pity, however, if the report were to foster the sort of complacency about their plight that all too readily takes root in Western governments.

The aristocratic novelist's position is based on his strong sympathies for peasant life, his attacks on the Russian Orthodox Church and his eventual excommunication.

Soviet commentators delight these days in telling their audiences once again that the United Nations has determined that Tolstoy is the most translated and probably the most widely read author in the

Despite this impressive statistic, it is nearly impossible to find his works on the shelves of Moscow books stores — oot because of unu-sual demand, it seems, but because plans for special commemorative editions may have slipped. The city's largest and fanciest

The farmers' markets, where peasants compete for customers with the official state stores — and generally show a wider selection, better quality and frequently better prices — are piled high with the fruits and vegetables of the harvest season. The air is alive with the brisk pungencies of fresh dill, scal-lions, onions and parsley as well as sweeter aromas of peaches, plums

The kerchiefed babushkas tending stalls with their shrewd stares and inviting chatter are in the height of their glory, with plenty to sell and purses fattened with profits to carry back to their hamlets and isolated villages in the countryside.

Private Plots

The hard winter days, when the cold will bring open sores to the lips of the outdoor stallkeepers, are mewhere in the future. Peasant plots, amounting to just small fraction of all the cultivated land in the Soviet Umon, account for more than a third of all the veg-etables and fruits sold at market. So important are the private plots to the economy that Leonid Be-zhnev guaranteed their existence in his new constitution passed last year — a form of capitalism that is anathema to strict Communist Party orthodoxy.

But the notion of competition for the kopecks of tight-fisted Moscow housewives has a noticeable impact on the peasants. Produce in the on the peasants. Produce in the state stores seldom looks as good as it does in the farmers' stalls, where the women wash their vegetables and set up handsome displays to catch the eye of the discerning shopper. Such fidiness and effort seems almost out of place in the drab state stores, with their bored, or sometimes rude attendants.

Survey of Moral High Ground

By George F. Will

WASHINGTON — Enough of W sobriety, gentle reader. Let us turn, instead, to the recent convention of the American Political Science Association. "Let other pens dwell on guilt and misery, said Jane Austen, and so say I, turning to the APSA's business meeting in New York earlier this

In 1976, the APSA, always energetic about occupying the moral high ground, declared that it would not convene in any state that refused to ratify the Equal Rights Amendment, as long as ERA was pending before the states. This strategy of trying to buy ratifica-tion reflects the understandable reluctance of ERA supporters to rely on their arguments about the merits of the amendment.

But in 1973, APSA cootracted with the Palmer House, a Hilton hotel in Chicago, to convene there in 1979. In 1976 Illinois had not (as it still bas not) ratified ERA, but the deadline for ratifying was March, 1979, before APSA's autumn convention, so APSA assumed that ERA could not be pending at convention time.

Vote to Renege However, it now seems possible that Congress will extend the dead-line to 1982. Faced with the prospect that ERA might be pending and unratified in Illinois in autumn, 1979, the APSA this month voted by a 4-1 margin to renege on its Palmer House contract. Hilton sent a tough (well, semitough) talking fellow to threaten to sue APSA - unless APSA agreed meet in another Hilton botcl. But Hilton also sent another fellow to say how much Hilton valued APSA's friendship. This demon-stration of the fiber of the business community left APSA convinced that Hilton was not to be taken

Had the vote gone against Chica-go by less than a two-thirds margin, the issue would bave been submitted to the entire APSA membership by mail ballot and the outcome might have been different. APSA business meetings have a peculiar composition: Imagine the political temperaments of people whose idea of a well-spent Saturday afternoon is one spent passing resolutions in hotel ballrooms.

The meeting overturned a ruling by the chairman that support for ERA violates APSA's constitution, which stipulates that APSA will not take stands "oo questions of public policy," except regarding academic freedom and freedom of expres-sion. Not even political scientists can believe ERA is such a matter. but the majority at the business meeting was at least evenhanded. It showed as much contempt for its constitution as for its contractual obligations.

Next, the meeting rejected overwhelmingly a proposal that APSA not participate in the International Political Science Association's 1979 meeting in Moscow. Those opposed to participation argued the impropriety of holding a political science convention in a nation where political science is impossible. (Free investigation of, say, power relations or interest groups in Soviet government is unimaginable). They also argued that to hold the IPSA meeting in Moscow at a time of increased repression, and when many natural scientists are refusing to go there, would amount to scabbing against the protest movement.

Those who favored going to Moscow used the arguments and rhetoric that have been used for about 61 years. From the IPSA:
"... Influence oo the growth of ioternational dialogue and increas-ing levels of mutual knowledge, tolerance, and the reduction of extreme aspects of ethnocentricism , contributes to the building of bridges of trust and confidence... From the U.S. State Department: "... Influence Soviet and Eastern European behavior oo burnan rights by cootinuing con-

So it came to pass that political scientists, having voted to sbun Chicago in the name of "human ghts," voted to go to Moscow. By this time all but the most avid activists had drifted away into the secoted dusk of Manhattan and the meeting looked like something left on the beach by the tide. Fortunately, someooe had the wit to notice the absence of a quorum. That dissolved the meeting before it could vote to condemn the University of Maryland, without any investigation, for not giving the chairmanship of its political science department to a Marxist who believes that to understand Marxism is to accept it.

"But, my dear sir," cried Mr. Weston (in Jane Austen's "Emma"). "if Emma comes away early, it will be breaking up the party."

"And no great harm if it does,"

Pessimism On Future Rises in U.Si

By James Reston

WASHINGTON — Every once in a while somebody produces a public opinion poll in America that makes you wonder. For example, the Department of Labor has just published one that is both a published one that is both and in the published and disrupting. It both surprising and disturbing. It suggests that the American people are not only troubled about the present, but are losing their natural optimism about the future.

The interviewing for this surprise.

The interviewing for this survey was conducted by the Roper organization right after the passage of Proposition 13 in California, and was analyzed by Public Research Inc., a private nonprofit organiza-tion under contract to the Labor

Among the conclusions of the survey were the following:

"The American people feel," it said, "that the United States is not as well off today as it was five years movement for the nation is not new: This trend has been picked up in these ratings since 1971."

Alarming

• "What is new, bowever, and alarming" the survey adds, "is the finding that, unlike all previous measures, the public feels that things are not going to get any better in the future."

ter in the future. . "
Well, we all have our individual judgments on the value of public opinion polls, but if this survey means anything, it is news of considerable importance. For it says some other things that, if true, must make us wonder where we are going.

For example, it finds that while there is a general anxiety in the na-tion about the future, the blacks are more optimistic about where we are going than the whites; the lowermiddle-income people are more op-timistic than the rich; and what's probably the most worrying of its conclusions: that the young are more pessimistic than the old.

In trying to explain this pessi-mism, the Labor Department's survey found that all people were startled by the influence of inflation, and the rising cost of living, even before the problem of unemploy-

Next to inflation and the cost of living, crime and violence and threat to life seemed to worry most Americans. The third concern was the tax burden on working Americans (particularly in the Middle West), followed by the cost of medical and bealth care, particularly by the people over 60 and those with incomes of less than $7,000 a

It is interesting to compare these anxieties in American life with what existed a generation or so ago. There is unemployment; but never in the wildest imagination of the past have so many people been em-ployed — now over 90 millioo — as there are at the present time.

No Major War

There are troubles between oations, but no major war or threat of major war exists. There is no military conscription in the United many people, black or white.

Finally, it is interesting that the Department of Labor should publish a survey dramatizing the grievances of the American people. Usually governments tell us that everything is dandy, but Secretary of Labor Ray Marshall is now telling Americans in this survey that have serious problems to face and are losing our confidence to deal with them, and asking us what we think should be done about this crisis of confidence.

"Awakenings"

After reading Mr. McLaughlin's article on "The U.S. in Midst of an Awakening" (HTT, Aug. 16), I had to conclude that be was remarking on the waves striking the shoreline and ignoring the boat in the water that created them.

He vaguely touches on the relig-ious and expounds in great detail on the secular. The current "Awakening" as well as others, were sbown to be more of a cultural or national renovation rather than a spiritual resurgency.

A religious awakening in Christianity is not limited to the U.S. of A. Finland is presently experiencing its third "Awakening" of the past two centuries. Christian Awakenings are primarily a result of an increasing rejection of fundamental values of the Bible. These values are replaced by humanistic theories which reject God and all of his attributes and replace Him with a deified version of man.

An Awakenings procession creates ripples of reaction comparable to a boat on a lake. Mr. MeLaughlin took the reformers in the boat, such as Dr. Graham and any fundamental person or movement, and presented them as reactionary waves. Then he took the reactionary waves of social and political persons and groups and put them in the boat as reformers.

The bumanist view that man will improve himself without God's di-rect assistance pervaded the scene prior to the third Awakening in the United States. The "God is dead" movement and others preceded counterfeit faiths in the forms of cults. The Jchovah Witnesses accompanied the third Awakening. And the "Moonies," or "Unificaand the Moonies, of Onlica-tion Church," is following the fourth. But a counterfeit only shows that there is a genuine. This is what I feel Mr. McLaughlin failed to point out.

A direct intervention by God is what inspires an "Awakening." All the social, political and cultic reacnons should not be confused with the genuine spiritual revival that is an "Awakening."

Hysteria? I read with a bit of amusement the apparently incensed letter of Paul G. Hugenholtz in your edition of Aug. 30, in which he says the dollar "is not backed by gold or other sound financial anchors."

He and unfortunately many oth-

I know of no law or regulation in the United States which prohibits anyone from taking astronomical amounts of dollars to the United States and exchanging them for gold or land or any other material asset, and to do with it what you please. Congressman Reveals Presents, Denies Park Coverup

WASHINGTON, Sept. 15 — De-oying charges that he had lied to cooceal a $1,000 cash gift from Korean businessman Tongsun Park, Rep. Charles Wilson, D-Calif, tes-tified yesterday that he received other cash gifts while serving as a congressman, including e previous-ly unreported $500 present from an aerospace lobbyist

"I'm not ashamed of receiving this," he said at a hearing by the House Select Committee on Ethics about the Park payment. "It's oot illegal . . . I had no reason to remember that or any other [gift]."
Asked by Rep. Brace Caputo, R-N.Y., if he had accepted other cash gifts during his congressional career, Rep. Wilson replied: "I have received cash gifts in the past

I can't recall how many or what the circumstances were. Pressed further, Rep. Wilson recalled that an executive of Northrop Corp., Donald Page, had paid $500 to Trader Vic's restaurant in Washington to help pay for Rep. Wilson's wedding reception there in November, 1975.

Asked if he had reported the money as income, Rep. Wilsoo said: "No, it was a gift."

Lobbying Mission

Rep. Wilson said that Mr. Page, a personal friend, had come to Washington from Los Angeles to do "some corporate relations" and was "contacting California repre-sentatives at the time."

Attorneys for the committee said later that they could not determine, without further information, whether the Page gift had violated either federal law or House regulations.

Craig Bradley, a law professor at the University of North Carolina who had interviewed Rep. Wilson on July 20, 1977, as a Justice Department attorney, testified: "Mr. partment ettorney, testified: "Mr. Wilson made the flat statement that he had never received anything from Tongsun Park."

Documents indicated yesterday that Rep. Wilson also failed to report the gift in e questionnaire that he returned to the committee eight days later.

"The mistake I made was an in-nocent one," he said, explaining that Mr. Park gave him the $1,000 in U.S. and Korean currency during his wedding trip to Korea. He described the period as a time "of great excitement," whose events still remain "for the most part, a

Funds for Nuclear Carrier Dropped by Senate Panel

By George C. Wilson

WASHINGTON, Sept. 15 (WP)

— The Senate Armed Services Committee, quickly following the lead of the House Armed Services Committee, yesterday pushed aside President Carter's newest list of requested weapons and approved instead the vetoed defense bill minus the Nimitz ouclear aircraft carrier.

With the $2 billion for the Nimitz deleted and $209 million added to pay shipbuilders' bills, the rewritten measure, if passed by the full Congress, would authorize the Pentagon to spend $35.2 billion on weapons and research in the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1.

Although most of the rest of the $126 billion that Mr. Carter sought for defense will be covered in a separate appropriations bill pending in Congress, the loss of the Nimitz money will keep the president from reaching his announced objective of increasing the fiscal 1979 de-fense budget by about 3 percent over the current year.

The Carter administration pledged to NATO allies earlier this year that the United States would increase its defense spending by 3 percent a year, after allowing for inflation, in fiscal years 1979 through 1984 to combat the steady Soviet military buildup.

With the full House and Senate virtually certain to go along with the smaller bill, Mr. Carter will have to request additional money for defense to boost his fiscal 1979 total to $126 billion.

Defense Secretary Harold Brown, at a Senate committee hearing yesterday, repeated that the president was "likely" to request supplemental funds "no later than this January."

The administration tried to take a legislative shortcut by sending to Congress a "wish list" of weapons and research to be financed by the $2 billion saved by deleting the Nimitz. But Chairman John Stennis, D-Miss., of the Senate Armed Services Committee said that it was too late in the legislative session for Congress to consider such a long list of projects.

Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., told Mr. Brown that it was "regrettable" that the net effect of the president's veto was "an overall decrease in military capabilities" when "everybody for the first time" seemed persuaded that defense spending should be increased.

In this way, as the moon progressively blocked out the signal from various parts of the galaxies, the Xray strength and exact source could be plotted.

Instead of coming entirely from the two visible galaxies, the astro-comers found that much of the Xray radiation was coming from a vast invisible region between the two island universes. This means, the investigators concluded in their paper, that an enormous cloud of invisible matter rather than nearly empty space exists between the two target galaxies.

The cloud emits no visible light, but it is so hot — hundreds of millions of degrees — that it emits telltale X-rays.

Taken with other observations during the last year, the finding strongly supports the hypothesis that the universe is closed, accord-ing to Dr. Herbert Friedman of the Naval Research Laboratory team. In the last decade or so, most astronomers have become convinced that the universe began about 16 billion years ago with a cosmic explosion (known as the "Big Bang"), from which all matter and energy emanated from a single point, ex-panding outward ever since.

But a controversy has persisted as to whether the universe is "open," expanding indefinitely and forever, or whether its headlong expansion will one day slow, stop and reverse itself in the "closed" model. Matter Measurement

There is universal agreement that the question can only be decided by knowing how much matter there is in the universe. Einstein's general theory of relativity predicts that if there is only a small amount of matter in the universe, its mutual gravitational attraction will be too weak ever to pull it together again, and matter will escape itself, like a rocket leaving the Earth.

But if the universe contains more than a certain critical mass, then gravity will be sufficient to slow its expansion and pull it together, like a ball thrown into the air that falls back to the ground. Until last year, the preponderance of evidence favored the "open" model of the universe, because astronomers could Earth's atmosphere, furthermore, blocks even invisible radiation such as the faint X-ray emission that can pinpoint invisible objects.

Two studies last year, one using quasars -- quasi-stellar radio emisions - that were observed by an optical telescope rocketed aloft, the other using light from brilliant, dis-tant galaxies, tried to estimate the distances of objects by the dimming of their signals in their journeys to an observatory. The findings were tentative.

It was to get a better view of the X-ray emissions that the NASA high-energy observatory satellite was launched.

"The important thing about this oew data," Dr. Friedman said in a telephone interview, "is that the Xrays are coming from an extremely diffuse source. This means that as immense amount of matter must be out there. This would not be the case if the same amount of X-ray radiation were coming from a concentrated galaxy or star cluster."

By making a mathematical esti-mate of the amount of invisible matter that must exist throughout the universe to account for the amount found between the two Aries galaxies, Dr. Friedman said that his group has concluded the universe weighs about 100 trillion trillion trillion tons (that is, 100 times ten with 50 reces after it).

100 times ten with 50 zeros after it). This value is very close to the one astrophysicists regard as critical mass — that mass beyond which the universe must fall back on

The findings reported by Dr. Friedman and his colleagues seem certain to have a profound effect on the thinking of astrophysicsts. cosmologists and even theologisms.

Some theologians argue that i closed universe would seem incon-sistent with the existence of God of divine purpose, since an entities cycle of Big Bang explosions and contractions would mean all events would randomly repeat themselves over and over again.

60 Years of Painting By Amateur-Professional

S.W.1, to Sept. 29. Montague Smyth was one of the long line of English artists who through economic circumstances were amateurs, but whose standards were highly professional. The son of an affluent lawyer, he earned a degree at Cambridge in 1884 and then went on a protracted tour of Europe, studying drawing and painting, for which he had a natural apotude, wherever he found congenial tutors. From 1894, he was exhibiting in group shows, and had his first one-man show in London in 1899. He was still happily at work in his 101st year, in 1963/64, and still exhibiting. This show draws on at least 60 years' painting, which is at its best in the landscapes of China and Japan done in 1905.

This show of more than 160 works, organized by the Royal Academy in collaboration with the Anglo-Portuguese Society and the Calouste Gulbenkian Foundation. is a revelation to us. Among remarkable works are paintings by the mystic and Cabalist D'Assumpcao; Julio Pomar (b. 1926); a ootable series of paintings enotied

Rodrigo Moynihan, as this 227work retrospecove demonstrates is a remarkably versatile draftsman and painter. After a careful academic training in Rome and at the Slade School, from which he was a prize-winning graduate in 1931, he became an enfant terrible in a sixyears' sequence of objective abstractions. In the late 1930s, associated with the Euston Road group, he practiced the most au-stere and subdued realism. After service with the army and as a war artist, he was elected to the rous abstraction based on land-Royal Academy, made a consider-able reputation as a fashionable careful and austere still lifes of the portraitist and was, in 1948, appointed professor of painting at the Royal College of Art. In the mid-1950s, however, abstraction once more began to creep into his work, notable in a celebrated portrait of his mother. In 1957 he resigned his professorship and his membership of the RA and left, first for France. subsequently for the United States, where followed a decade of rigo-

Symbolic Man Stripped Down to Posture and Stride

By Michael Gibson

Sept. 30) with more than 300 items from the foundation's own large fund and from the collections of the Giacometti Foundation in Zurich and of the artist's family. In addition to 116 sculptures, there are 68 paintings, 120 drawings, a selection of prints and even the walls of the artist's studio, which have been preserved thanks to the labor of restorer Michel Bourbon.

What comes to one's mind today when the name of Giacometti is mentioned - the extremely thin and elongated figures - is a manner which the artist, whose age coincided with that of our century (he was born in 1901), came to just after World War II, in 1945. Before the war he worked in the spiritual company of the surrealists, took an interest in the style of African art and produced sculptures with volmmes which appear almost classic compared to his later work. Breton excommunicated him from the surrealist mouvement when he began working on the human head once more. "A head," shrugged Breton, we all know whatthat is!" And how wrong he was.

What happened after that is cer-tainly the most interesting part of his career, because the development. was, on the one hand, involuntary and, in fact, frightening for Giacometri himself, who found his figures dwindling, melting, vanish-ing, and who made immense efforts to keep them from disappearing altogether.

But this fascinating adventure of an artist whose work seems to diso-ality of Giacometti. The other aspect, which determines his importance and relevance, is the context in which this work appeared. It is certainly not beside the point to remind oneself that it came in the wake of one of the most horrible wars this planet has known, nor to recall the emaciated figures who emerged from the death camps. But while Giacometti's art is a humanist art, the correspondence one can find between his figures and the ravaged bodies of the survivors is only a fearful

It seems, rather, that Giacometo's humanism, the fruits of his own thoughtful and sensitive temperament has a kinship with that of an Albert Camus.

In the high ages of idealism, the human figure was given the naive fullness which a certain degree of complacency allowed. But the image of man which emerged in the postwar period, after the intellectual destruction of the whole mancentered vision of a world of benign providence and progress, that image appeared stripped of all the usurped qualities of fullness and

The stripping down was not something perceived by Giacometti alone. In those days a Bernard Buffet was producing promising work which also reflected this sort of view, if less profoundly and in a more glumly nihilistic form.

What remained of the human figure in Giacometti's postwar work was something without mass, vol-ume, qualities. Yet, upright like the charred beams of a ruised city, something remained: a recognizable human stance, erect, a capaci-ty to stride forward, that is to move away from one situation and forward into another, and, of course, that quality of presence which is so strongly perceived as a human pres-ence in most of Giacometti's work, whether sculpture or painting.

This is where the affinity with

Camus appears most clearly. Both

The fact that this does not coincide with Giacometti's own explanations of what he was trying to achieve does oot detract from the possible validity of what has been said above. It would, in fact, have sounding clarity and obviousness. Instead, he was working in the dark and in the depths, full of worry and uncertainty. The 'Neglected' Painters Are Edging Into Spotlight

By Souren Melikian

ONDON, Sept. 15 (IHT) Among the many quirks of the art market, there is a rule that has no parallel eisewhere in the economy. Io the lower price brackets say, below £1,000 - buyers seem to make little effort to discriminate between higher and lower quality. Last Tuesday, at Sotheby Belgravia's sale of Victorian paintings, this was was proved once again.

A member of the wellknown Royal Society of Painters in Watercolors, Goodwin exhibited many times at the Royal Academy. The Victoria and Albert Museum in London has some watercolors of own his work. His other picture, called "Salisbury," still more interesting, was knocked down at £286. The subject matter is reminiscent of Corot.

A thoroughly conventional, almost photographic view of "The Banks of the Ithon," done by Da-vid Bates in 1884, when the painter was in France, had little to recommend it despite the £528 it fetched. A daub by Alfred de Breanski Jr., "At Shepperton on the Wye," with an imitaove landscape in a French manner halfway between Harpignies and Corot, made an unjustified £572 - chiefly because Breanski's name is comparatively well-

> Dearest of all to the British heart are portraits of pets and related works. A particularly soppy scene showing a female cat dreamily watching her kittens as they bite into a dead pigeon is a perfect illustration of the genre. The undeniable skill of Horatio Henry Couldery at painting the minutest silky reflection on the tabby car's fur may account for the extravagant price of £715.

Ironically, the more interesting animal portraits often command much lower prices. In the last third of the 19th century there were a good many regional painters who were busy painting portraits of animals meant to faithfully render certain breeds or prized animals. They painted with considerable care for themselves knew little about it any-

Certain Atmosphere

Sometimes this resulted in surprising works, interesting for a cer-tain atmosphere. A good dog portrait in the sale fell within this class, called "Tartar, a Jack Russell," by G.B. Matthews, it made £77. It was better as a painting than the cat and kittens, although it was nine times cheaper.

Last but not least, one of the more interesting categories of paintings that turn up at early-season sales of low-priced Victorian works consists of urban scenes done by regional artists working in a manner that reminds one of American primitives. Their choice of subject was often peculiar, possibly dictated by their clientele.

On Tuesday, a view of a square in old Liverpool showed 18th-century terraced houses with long wooden balconies supported by regularly spaced pillars. Naively done figures were planted here and there to give a sense of perspective to the rectangular square. The sig-oature of one H. Magenis and a date 1886 were the only elements of information. At £82, it was not expensive if one compares it with the uospeakable daubs showing "Country Cottages" or "Fishing Boats Tossed on a Stormy Sea" that went like hot cakes. All told, this may well be the last.

field where an independent-minded buyer with a limited budget stands a fair chance of buying acceptable works and, once in a while, extremely fine ones that do not suit the fashion of the moment. There is still time to buy, but perhaps not

By John Walker

ONDON, Sept. 15 (IHT) -Seventy-one years separate Leonard Charteris, hero of Berhard Shaw's "The Philanderer," from Bill Maitland, central character of John Osborne's "Inadmissible Evidence." Yet both are linked by their predatory attitude to women.

The difference time has made is that Charteris can justify his hatred of the possessiveness of women in love by a smug belief in the social emancipation of his time, the 1890s. But Maitland has no such escape from moral bankruptcy. He is lacerated by guilt, even as he makes his latest conquest.

passion, sustaining the drama by the energy of his words.

Shaw's play is partly autobiographical, setting out his own curious sexual creed and based on his. experiences of having two simultaneous love affairs, ooc of them with a woman of great passion and jealousy. He later described the play to Ellen Terry as "a combination of mechanical farce with realistic filth which quite disgusted me."

character somewhat resembling Shaw, has an irresistible attraction for women and enjoys flirtation is trying to rid himself of his old love, Julia, a woman much given to creating scenes, and attach himself to Grace, one of the new emancipated women, whose attitudes have been influenced by Ibsen.

The women clash over Charteris, but he expertly manipulates Julia info a match with a conventionally romantic doctor — only to discover that Grace will not marry him because she loves him and does not wish to put herself in his power.

This view of sexual attraction as a trap gives the play its vitality and interest, although much of the com-edy comes from incidental matters, satire on the medical profession and on those who outwardly follow new fashions in social behavior while inwardly remaining

The tone is farcical and the acting is expertly done in a style to match. Penelope Wilton's Julia is able to turn on and off her tears to suit the occasion and she manages the difficult transition Shaw want-ed in the final scene, changing from a ridiculous figure to a pitiable one. John Standing is marvelous as the melancholy Dr. Paramore, discoverer of a nonexistent disease, and Dinsdale Landen demonstrates .Charteris' charm.

Dollar Declines Amid Extremely Thin Trading

LONDON, Sept. 15 (AP-DJ) —
The dollar lost ground against most major currencies today in extremely jittery foreign exchange dealings, as the market awaited the outcome of the Mideast peace talks at Camp David, and next Tuesday's Senate test vote on the natural-gas bill.

Turnover was fairly thin, which is typical of a Friday. But, in addition, many operators stayed "flat," out of the market entirely, awaiting word from Washington. The dollar fell 52 points against the Deutsche mark at 1.9766 DM and 65 points against the Swiss franc at 1.5895 francs. Against the yea, the dollar lost 37 points at 189.78 yea, but was steady against the French franc at 43650 francs versus 4.3655 francs. Sterling was little changed at $1,9613 compared with $1,9605 but

Schmidt, Giscard Agree On Basics of EMS Plan

AACHEN, West Germany, Sept. 15 (AP-DJ) — West German Chan-cellor Helmut Schmidt and French resident Valery Giscard d'Estaing announced today they had formu-lated a common platform on the European Monetary System, giving renewed impetus to the push for renewed impetus to the push for the year-end start-up target.

The two heads of state, while not revealing the specifics of the pro-posal, said the recommendations would be presented to a meeting of the European Community finance ministers in Brussels Monday.

"In recent days, there has been a line of criticism in some newspa-pers, even in my country, that there was a difference of opinion be-tween France and the Federal Re-public on current policy," Mr. Schmidt said. "Pardon me, but we must disappoint the skepocs. In fact, there is no difference of

Indications from the bilateral summit were that the program to be unveiled Monday will be based on a parity grid system, much like the current European currency arrangement or snake. Under this system, currencies would be set at fixed rates and float against each other within a narrow band.

Informed observers speculate that, although the tone of the talks

The two-day meeting came against the backdrop of a divergence of opinion within the EEC regarding the formation of the EMS. Differences centered on the base or numeraire for the system, the basic building block of the EMS, and on the operation of the European Monetary Fund.

The French had favored a basket-of-currencies approach to the oumeraire, letting the different funds float against a European cur-rency unit, defined by the value of the various funds. Uoder this system, intervention would be the main task of one central bank, rather than two central banks if currencies were ded to one another directly.

Agreement was also seemingly reached on the operation of the European Monetary Fund, the reserve pool for the arrangment. At the Bremen summit, the countries had said that up to 20 percent of member countries' reserves could be contributed to the pact. However, since then, disagreement has surfaced regarding whether the 20-per-cent target should be reached.

The Bundesbank, for one, was seen as somewhat hesitant to turn over 20 percent of its reserves, the largest in the world.

Despite what were described as some remaining "technical differences," the two countries, the driving force behind the EMS, shrugged them aside to concentrate on bringing the "historical oeccesi-ty of EMS" into being.

Volkswagen Strikers Return to U.S. Plant NEW STANTON, Pa. Sept. 15 (UPI) — A two-day wildcar strike at the Volkswagen Westmoreland assembly plant near here ended to day as nearly 2,000 employees returned to work, apparently heading pleas from their union. A spokesman for Volkswagen of America Corp. said that under all America Corp. said that under an agreement reached yesterday with the United Auto Workers negotiating committee. "management fepresentatives are in each department inside the plant... to discuss any problems that may be raised by employees." employees."

Sweden Balances Trade

STOCKHOLM, Sept. 15 (AP-DJ) - Sweden's trade account was evenly balanced in August after six straight months of sizable surplus es, but it still showed great improvement over the August 1977 deficit, according to preliminary statistics published yesterday. Ex-ports (fob) and imports (cif) were estimated at an equal 7.2 billion kroner ($1.62 billion) in August. THE STAKES HAVE NEVER BEEN HIGHER, THE PROBLEM NEVER MORE COMPLEX.

The third in a series of working conferences sponsored by the International Herald Tribune and Forex Research Limited

BOOKS

THREE HUNDRED EMINENT PERSONALITIES A Psychosocial Analysis of the Famous

By Mildred George Goertzel, Victor Goertzel and Ted George Goertzel. Jossey-Bass. 441 pp. $15.00.

is bestowed by the media or, as in recognition: lives fascinating or shocking high in accomplishment. sometimes symbolic, occasionally exemplary. They express talents, abilities, feelings or a kind of charisma which attracts the attention of the public. What made them this way? What kind of families did they have, what schooling, what experiences?

The Goertzels (joined this time by their son, also a behavioral scientist) are pioneers in this field. They studied the childhoods of 400 eminent personalities who achieved recognition before 1962 in a re-markable book called "Cradles of Eminence" published that year. Now, an equally interesting work, which shows what changes have taken place in the rearing, educa-tioo and environments of the famous, deals with those who have woo eminence since 1962 and goes on to analyze their experience as adults, their marriage, divorces, creative abilioes, sexuality, personality and fate.

The evidence given here is both anecdotal and statistical. The method is similar to that of the earlier book, though the social and ethnie composition of the eminent has changed.

Among these politicians (Jimmy Carter and Che Guevera among them), these writers (Jessamyn West and Anais Nin), these artists (Andrew Wyeth and Heory Moore), the Goertzels have made some interesting findings: Political personalities often like school; art-ists seldom do. Literary personalities come from the most troubled bomes and are the most precocious. Only and firstborn children have a high representation in the sam-plings, youngest and firstborn are more likely to be sexually divergent; politicians are more likely to be middle children who learn to compromise and manipulate; writers are more likely to be only chil-

Other key points: Most eminent men whn marry have children.
Only seven of the 81 eminent women combine marriage, children and a career. More women than men are divorced. Sons of famous men, more than daughters, have serious problems in realizing their own potential. Parents have more distant relationships with their emi-nent offspring than do the siblings

There are both contrasts and similarities between the 400 personalities of "Cradles of Eminence" and the 300 in this book. Resemhlances include love of learning in the childhood home; strong dislike of school; strong preference for self-education even where the eminent hold college degrees; traumat-ie vicissitudes in the father's career;

the need to compensate for physical and environmental bandicaps.

The differences are also significant. Among the 400, fully one-fourth had mothers described as being dominating, mothers of such famous men as Pable Casals, Doug-las MacArthur, Franklin Roosevelt and Frank Lloyd Wright. Champion Jousts With Boxing's King

NEW ORLEANS, Sept. 15 (WP)

— The end of the road — a long, bittersweet stretch paved with gold but roughened by potholes and detours — is at hand for Muhammad

But if Ali should resurrect from his 36-year-old body the skills that made him king of the boxing world for almost two decades, he will be-come the first heavyweight to win the most coveted bauble in sports for the third time, a fitting finale for his theatrical ego.

Thus, the stage is set for a psy-chodrama that will be attended by 50,000 in the Superdome here and watched by countless millions of prime-time television viewers. Television executives expect 45 percent of U.S. homes to be tuned in for

The 25-year old champion weighed 201, 5 more than for the stunning upset seven months ago in which he scored a split decision. Both seemed sharp and taut, Ali despite his age and Spinks despite an undisciplined training regimen that included the disco scene and bar-closing the week of the fight.

How do the bookmakers feel out Spinks, there is no need for me about all this? They have installed Ali as a 2-1 favorite, some late Spinks money having knocked a half point off the odds in the last few days. Las Vegas, where gambling is legal, reports little action but a bettor must put up $11 to win $5 if he picks Ali, and put up $5 to win 59 if he picks the champion.

NEW YORK, Sept. 15 (NYT) — The Dallas Cowboys' explosive offense, which has accounted for 72 points in two games, is matched on Sunday against the Los Angeles Rams' stout defense, which has allowed just 14 points this season. Previews of this and the other NFL games follow, with won-lost records in parentheses.

Dallas (2-0) at Los Angeles (2-0) — The Rams were fortunate to get Jerry Latin, a useful back with speed, in a trade with the Cardinals after Wendell Tyler injured a knee. Lawrence McCutcheon is still out, so the Clydesdales, John Cappelleto and Cullen Bryant, start again. The Giants worked a short passing game against Dallas with some success. But the key to the Cowboys' attack is to get at Roger Staubach, and that's not easy. The Rams have seven sacks so far. Betting line:

Dallas by 4 points.

Washington (2-0) at St. Louis (0-2) — The Cardinals have beaten the Redskins only once in the last six games, and it will be some time before they do it again. Their big-play offense has all but disappeared. Joe Theismann has the Redskin attack moving all over the field. He will work on the vulnerable left corner of the Cardinal defense. Betting line: Washington by 4.

Chicago (2-0) at Detroit (1-1) —

The Bears' victories were due mainly to foes' errors, as was the Lions' victory. A strike or two by Chicago's offense is long overdue. Lion quarterback Greg Landry has bru-ised ribs but will start. Betting line: Chicago by 3. Philadeiphia (0-2) at New Or-ship of the Dallas Cowboys, female cheerleaders have become as important as the teams, and every profontball club owner is determined to present the sexiest girls that money can buy. The competi-tion is so fierce that there is now talk of the Na-tional Fontball League holding a draft for college cheer leaders similar to the one they hold for players. The team

Buchwald with the worst cheerleading re-cords would have the first picks of the new crop. There are trades now going on between the cheerleader coaches in the NFL, and every pro organization is looking for some-one to bolster its line.

I was in the office of the coach of the Washington Redskinettes, and there was a great flurry of activity. The coach was on the phone to the Los Angeles Rams. I heard her say, "Harriet we need an offensive pom-pom girl. We'll give you two baton twirlers and a 1979 draft pick in exchange for a six-foot blonde with a 40-inch bust. No. we don't want her. Our scouts say she uses silicone. What about Genevieve? We hear she's fighting with the other girls and wants to move to Washington. I'll trade you Candy and Susie for her. What do you mean they're too old? Candy and Susie are in their prime. They haven't dropped a baton in six games. If they don't get injured. they're good for four more seasons. Get back to me because I may make a deal with the Boston Patri-

She can do Saturday Night Fever in four minutes flat, and the ABC cameras had her on for 30 seconds while Howard Cosell was talking about Muhammad Ali. What do I want in exchange? Do you have a hrunette who can do cartwheels and splits? No. I'm not selling you a dog. We have too many redheds on the squad now, but we're weak on brunettes who can do cartwheels. Honest to Pete, Mabel, I hate to trade her, but I can only use her at halftime, and she says if she can't dance during the entire game, she doesn't want to sit on the bench. No, I can't offer you our first draft choice for 1980. We gave her away to Baltimore for Miss Maryland of 1971. We needed some depth during the TV commercial breaks. Will you get back to cial breaks. One of the Redskinettes' assist-ants came in. "Mary. Helen wants to be put on waivers. She just broke up with one of the Redskins, and she says she doesn't have the heart to cheer for our team any more."

"Oh God," the coach said. "We built Sousa's entire 'Washington Post March' number around her.

Can't we find her another player?

At a performance of "Becket" by Tennyson at Windsor Castle (1893).

The Queen Was Exceedingly Delighted

ONDON (IHT) — Queen Victoria's amused. But in fact she often was.
"I was MOST EXCEEDINGLY DELIGHTED," she wrote after hearing
Malibran sing on her loth birthday.

"We were all in fits of laughter," she wrote after seeing a comedy in the '50s at Windsor. In London, Berlioz' "Benvenuto Cellini" unfortunately had the same effect: "It could only be compared to the noise of dogs and cats! The two acts kept us in fits of laughter, owing to their extreme foolish-

Another French evening, Coquelin in a comedy, provoked more laughter, friendly this time: "There is nothing like the French for that kind of thing. We laughed very

Long Life

Throughout her long life Queen Victoria was an enthusiastic audience, and a new book, "Queen Victoria Goes to the Theater" George Rowell (£6.95, Paul Elek, London), details her tastes during her many years as a spectator, for if she never set foot in a theater in the 40 years after Prince Albert's death, the theater often came to her in the form of professional troupes, household pantomimes and plays performed in several languages by her numerous progeny (including "Red Riding Hood" with the future Prince of Wales as ein Wolf).

While English playwriting was at one of its lowest points during her long reign — Wilde and Shaw appeared only toward the end and she never saw their work or possi-bly heard of it - Mr. Rowell gives a wellintentioned if unconvincing argument that Victoria's interest in spectacle in general helped revive the theater. Certainly, public reaction against the French in the revolutionary year 1848 ("Is This The Time To Call Upon The English Nation To Support a French Company?" asked The Theater Journal) obliged the queen to support the

In any case, French drama was not to her taste. Although impressed by Rachel in "Phedre," she thought little of the play: "French tragedy is not pleasing, and extremely unnatural." She had enjoyed Charles Kemble playing Hamlet at the age of 66, but the French actor Frederick Lemaitre, playing Ruy Blas at 52, was "very old, without a touth in his head, which renders him scarcely intelligible." ers him scarcely intelligible."

Catholic Taste

The queen's taste was catholic, energetic and sometimes rather trying. She was a life-long lover of the circus so the management of Drury Lane put on a lion act after Rossi-ni's "William Tell" as a sure means of holding her attention.

She saw Tom Thumb and felt sorry for him, liked a music-hall performer named Frederick Robson ("His song, terminating with the refrain Diddle doo, diddle dum, quite haunts us") and her favorite Shakespeare play was "King John."

Above all, the queen loved music. Her happiest evenings were spent singing to Prince Albert's piano accompaniment. At the age of 72 she still danced gracefully: "light airy steps in the old courtly fashion," Sir Henry Ponsonby noted, "no limp or stick but every figure carefully and prettily danced." The opera "I Puritani" was always
"dear Puritani" to the queen, for she saw it first with the young German prince she later

Bellini was ber favorite, followed by Don-izetti and later by Meyerbeer. She didn't care much for Rossini, had little experience of Verdi although she liked "II Trovatore" ("the music is infinitely superior to anything I have heard by Verdi"). She respected Mozart but found "The Magic Flute" "too simple, trivial and rather absurd for our times' while "Cosi Fan Tutte" was too long. She did not like "The Marriage of Figaro" but came to admire "Don Giovanni." She saw her first performance of Wagner. Jean de Reszke in "Lohengrin," in celebration of her 80th birthday. "I was enchanted," she

Shrewd Judge

As queen, Victoria was well aware that she was a spectacle herself and became a shrewd judge of audience reaction when she went to the theater; her comments even suggest that she was rather good at milking applause. When Napoleon III made an offiappliance, when respondent in made an official visit and they attended the opera, "I led the Emperor forward, making it as clear as I could that he was the principal person on this occasion." The French ruler's visit had not been without problems: The Waterloo Chamber at Windsor, for example, had to be bestly respirite and the Portray Galley. be hastily rechristened the Portrait Gallery.

Perhaps the best measure of Victoria's enthusiasm for spectacle, and of ber extraordinary physical resistance, was the number of times she went to the theater. In 1854 she calculated she had been, "25 times to the Play, 13 times to the French play (and opera comique), 14 times to the New Opera." She saw Dion Boucicault's version of "The Corsican Brothers" five times in two months. "King Lear" three times in one summer and three of Bellini's operas t"Norma." "I Puri-"La Sonnamhula") some 20 times each over a period of 25 years. She enjoyed "Hamlet" in German and during a four-and-a-half hour performance of "The Winter's Tale," "we hardly noticed the length of time."

Queen Victoria's early mentor, Lord Melbourne, had scant interest in the theater, once saying of an MP who had written a play, "He writes plays and I don't think a man who writes plays is ever good for much else." In further reproof Lord Melbourne added, "And he is a friend of Wordsworth."

The queen, it is clear, paid no attention to Melbourne's scorn, Late in life she wrote after a performance, as if in summary of a lifetime's pleasurable theatergoing, "All the cleverness and wit of it." She was after all, it is nice to think, often amused.
